Notes on Use

The court may transfer the proceedings to the county where the child is physically present, the parent resides, or other proceedings are pending concerning the custody of the child. The judge shall consult with the judge of the proposed receiving court prior to transferring venue. If the judges do not agree that the case should be transferred or if a hearing is requested, a hearing shall be held. Notice shall be given to parties and interested parties, the secretary and the proposed receiving court. In deciding the motion, the considerations may include: which county presents the greater likelihood of permanency for the child, and which county will be providing services to the child and family.

If the judge orders the case transferred, the order transferring venue shall include findings stating why the case is being transferred and the names and addresses of all interested parties, if available. The transferring judge, if the child has been adjudicated, shall transmit recommendations as to disposition.
